EXT. PARK - AFTERNOON - GOLDEN HOUR

It is a late afternoon. The air smells of that crispy smell of autumn and glooming rain clouds.

Sam (early 20s) walks at a slow and a almost composed pace. His heavy boots crunch softly on leaves in the grass. In the back ground the Pavilion coming into view,

Sam walks along the park trail, he sees the Pavilion.

He takes a deep breath, his chest rising sharply before he walks past frame right.

Sam comes to a stop at a bench.

The old bench that overlooks the now empty duck pond, the park an eerily quiet, only some distant rustle of dry leaves can be heard

He traces his fingers slowly along a rough, weathered knife etching carved deep into the grain:

"Mya X Sam"

A single, heavy tear wells up in his eye, breaks free, and rolls silently down his cheek, catching the golden light before dropping onto the wood.

Sam climbs awkwardly onto the seat, pulling his legs up to sit on the bench table itself, looking out over the lake.

Slowly, He reaches into his coat pocket and pulls out a cigarette, then a lighter.

SCRAP. SCRAP, SPARK

The metallic wheel spins twice before a sharp flame catches. He brings the fire to the tip of the cigarette.

Fwup.

He lights it, snapping the lid shut.

CLICK.

Sam takes a long deep drag, his eyes shut as the embers flares. He lowers his hand, watching as the smoke dances in breeze.

He lets out a long, shuddering sigh, the tension visibly draining from his shoulders, and puffs once more.

Wo hold on to this shot for the rest of the film. How ever long it takes the actor to finish the cigarette.

Then Sam hangs his head. Rubs his eyes and walks off the bench, turns and walks away.