EXT. CLIFFSIDE OVERLOOK - AFTERNOON

A bench sits looking over a cliff side view of a rocky horizon.

CRACK. CRUNCH.

Leaves and twigs snap as HENRY (29) walks over. Worn boots, run though hair, a hollow expression.

He stands in front of the bench looking at it like an old friend.

He drops onto the bench, his weight drops into the seat like a stone.

He lifts his right arm and drapes it across the back of the bench.

Then he looks over at his open, empty palm.

His face falls, pulls his arm back and lets it drop heavily into his lap.

He sighs and takes out his phone.

He looks at photos.

PHOTO: A younger, vibrant Henry laughing next to ALAYNA (20s) under summer sun.

Swipe.

PHOTO: On one knee in a blooming meadow, sliding a ring onto her finger.

Swipe.

PHOTO: Their wedding day, lost in a kiss beneath an arch of white roses.

His thumb hovers over the screen. His throat tightens.

He puts the phone next to him on the bench.

He reaches into his pocket and pulls something out with his right hand tight in a white-knuckled fist, slowly uncurls. show resting in his palm are two wedding bands, his and hers.

SIGH.

He rears back and violently throws the rings out over the cliff side.

He leans forward over his knees, waiting.

Silence. No sound of metal hitting rock. Just the wind.

Henry collapses inward, burying his face in his hands. A single, choked sob breaks from his chest.

RING RING.

The phone vibrates harshly against the wooden slats.

CALLER ID: CHLOE

Henry doesn't move at first. He wipes his face, forces a deep breath, and answers.

HENRY
(voice raspy, clearing his throat)
Hello? Y-yeah... I am on my way home now.

He pushes himself up and turns back toward the treeline.

A small brass plaque on the bench:
"In Loving Memory of Alayna Walker
Forever Watching her Horizon."

Out of focus in the background, Henry walks back into the treeline, leaving the empty bench behind.

FADE OUT